Forty-eight hours must be allowed after the time of placing cars of commodities other than grain in bulk upon team tracks or private tracks at any railroad station in this state, for the loading or unloading of such cars, and until the expiration of the said specified time no charge for demurrage must be made.

The above ruling is in accordance with the rules of the Car Service association at St. Louis and Kansas City, as understood and approved by the commissioner, and a prompt compliance with the same on the part of all railroad companies in this state is expected. ST. LOUIS STREET RAILWAYS How They Excel in Efficiency Those of

A Chicago correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says:
One great advantage St. Louis enjoys over Chicago in the matter of the street railroad situation. The down-town terminals are better distributed. They serve to scatter the crowds at the hours of the day whon everybody is coming down-town or going home. Here the north and west side systems loop in continuous processions of clanging gonzs around the city hall. And the south side systems bring their traffic to within three blocks of the same point. Suppose that all of the street railroads of St. Louis unloaded and loaded in the space bounded by Fourth, Market, Sixth and Locust streets. Then you would have he Chicago situation. Then there would have he chicago situation and the congestion every morning and evening. Imagine the street railroads of St. Louis, with their terminals thus bunched, trying to handle twice as many people as they do now. The scattered street railroad terminals are a great advantage to St. Louis, and that advantage will increase every year. They may be readered still more effective in postpon ing the day of congestion by giving every one of them what some have now—a loop. > Among the Protestant crowd were nearly a thousand militiamen in plain clothes and the opposing crowd consisted of the lower classes of French-Canadians, principally quarrymen from Corte St. Luc, or others of a like stamp. Occasionally the volunteers and their adherents fell into line and marched around the block enclosing the Champ de Mars, and the opposing crowd did likewise, marching around the block to the west of Champ de Mars. They eyed each other jealously and each moment the bitter feeling increased, in evidence of which partisan tunes were shouted by thousands of lusty voices, and pandemonium reigned.

This was the situation when the doors of the hall were thrown open. Everybody expected a riot, the delegates emerged from the hall and turned to the west end. Instantly the volunteers formed a cordon at the edge of the sidewalk, and white handkerchiefs were produced and held around their necks. This was the distin-guishing badge, no one without it could approach the Endeavor-ers from the opposite side of the street, and slowly and with out any manifestation of alarm the out any manifestation of alarm the delegates proceeded. Then came a barst of song. "At the Cross" rolled out upon the air, and the result was something wonderful. Almost perfect something wonderful. Almost perfect silence fell upon the growd. The Frenchmen on the Champ de Mars stood silently gazing at the procession of Endeavorers, which marched to the time of the piece of music they were singing. All emerged and passed out of the dangerous locality in safety. Then the militiamen, who had moved slowly after the growd, turned right about face and marched down east to a short distance below the Drill hall singing "Onward.

below the Drill hall singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War." They were greeted with some jeers from the crowd that angrily watched them, but no blows were ex changed. As they again turned and marched west the multitude melted away, the blockade of cabs and street and the Christian E was at a peaceable end. It was at one time intended to dis-miss the Drill hall meeting by the rear door, but President Clark, on assur-ance from the military that they would were not recovered. The Chesapeake was a well-built yacht, and was owned by the Avery brothers, William and Fred. The former was captain, and is counted skillful in handling a sailboat. The party had been out during the afternoon, and had been enjoying the pleasant sailing. When the storm struck them they were unprepared for its sudden fury, and before anybody had time to prepare for the emergency they were all in the water. Some were able to swim, but others were not, and

The Avery brothers and Gray swam to the assistance of Miss Compton and succeeded in getting her back to the yacht, where she clung until Capt. Mo-Kay of the tug Turrence, who witnessed the disaster came to their as-sistance. Misa Compton and Gray were unconscious when resoued, and they were taken to the life saving sta-
